A destination des futurs élèves de terminale LLCER

As part of the national curriculum, I selected two books for you to read before school reopens in September :

Arthur Miller, Death of a Salesman (1949)

Hanif Kureishi, The Buddha of Suburbia (1990)

The edition does not matter as long as you show up in class with your books. There will be a quiz for each book to force you into reading them carefully during summer. Each quiz will encapsulate basic questions related to the diegesis : place, time period, main and secondary characters, landmark events, turning points, general structure.

I also selected a trial movie that will be watched and dealt with in class :

Twelve Angry Men, Sidney Lumet (1957)

Let me refer you to the blog that I conceived as your study companion all year round. You will find extra information, links and helpful words of advice for the LLCER class - free online editions of the books have been downloaded for the terminales :

See you in September, all ready and in high spirits,
